

Doom, Dharma and the Truth that sets us free: The Inner-Life Demands of Climate Change

Come and hear Alastair McIntosh, honorary professor in College of Social Sciences, University of Glasgow, author and activist on Wednesday 8 June at 6pm in St Stephen's Church, High St, Exeter.

The science of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change is unequivocal. We're not about to go extinct on any credible scenario, but climate change is fast degrading the planet. It multiplies such factors as migration, conflict, food insecurity and habitat loss. But as COP26 shows once again, what the science says must be done and what politicians can deliver don't add up. What deeper truths might we be invited to face, both for us as individuals and in the activist and faith groups to which we might belong?

This is his latest book (2020) which will be on sale. It has been described as “imbued with the deepest hope for a better world” by Sir Jonathon Porritt and as “a climate primer for our times” by Professor Michael E. Mann.

Drinks available from 5.30pm